The mutual project 2024 Mehar Baba Charitable Trust and German Embassy New Delhi

Together we can celebrate an important milestone in the project "Enhancing the livelihoods of Rural Women through development of Phulkari Craft, Communication & Social Media Skills": The completion of the training measures.

The outstanding work of the Mehar Baba Charitable Trust was already evident during the presentation of the project thanks to the convincing project proposal. It was therefore easy for the selection committee for funding the project through a micro-project of the German Embassy New Delhi.

A project that trains over 800 women in Fatehgarh Sahib district and enables them to improve the living conditions of their families in rural Punjab. It is a special honor for the embassy to be part of this project.

The Mehar Baba Charitable Trust implemented the project with a great deal of expertise, commitment and dedication, as evidenced by the very positive interim reports on the progress of the training measures.

With the completion of the project, the participants have the opportunity to improve their lives with additional knowledge and skills. I wish all participants in the program continued success.

My thanks go to all employees of the Mehar Baba Charitable Trust involved in the project for the excellent implementation of the project and the very strict adherence to the conditions of the funding contract.

Transforming Lives of Rural Women Engaged in Phulkari-making

I cannot thank enough the esteemed representatives of the German Embassy, who came forward to empower the rural women of Punjab with their generous support.

We at MBCT had been working since for 187 villages in District Fatehgarh Saheb of Punjab helping the people in acquiring newer skills, empowering the girls and the women in these villages to come out of their homes and embrace learning, acquiring newer skills, and transforming their lives, when they got into some well-paying job or decided to become entrepreneurs.

The current project has enhanced the knowledge and skills level of rural women further through this special initiative with the support of the German Embassy to make our Phulkari makers capable of enhancing their skills in communication and social media.

This is not only 869 women in 31 villages of Punjab who have benefitted from this unique initiative, but 869 households can now look forward to better opportunities, better earnings, and newer opportunities.

We at MBCT feel encouraged and empowered with the unconditional support of the people from across the globe to come forward and recognise these endeavours.

Thanks for believing in the potential of these rural women. Thanks for giving us opportunity to serve them, and weave a beautiful tapestry of hope and prosperity.

ANALYSIS & EVALUATION

"As women achieve power, the barriers will fall. As society sees what women can do, as women see what women can do, there will be more women out there doing things, and we'll all be better off for it."
— Sandra Day O'Connor

Introduction

The German Embassy and MBCT's collaborative project, "Enhancing the Livelihood of Rural Women through Development of Phulkari Craft, Communication, and Media Skills," embodies a visionary approach to empowering rural women in India, thereby contributing to the preservation of the traditional Phulkari embroidery craft, while fostering socio-economic growth and community development.

This initiative is built on the premise that the preservation of traditional crafts, such as Phulkari, is inextricably linked to the empowerment of rural women, who have historically been the custodians of these art forms. By providing rural women with training, mentorship, and support in Phulkari embroidery, communication, and media skills, this project aims to enhance their livelihoods, promote their socio-economic development, and contribute to the preservation of India's rich cultural heritage.

The project's focus on Phulkari embroidery is particularly significant, given the craft's cultural and economic importance in the Punjab region, where it originated.

Under the project, 869 trainees got the training of Phulkari. The training has been divided into 81 clusters in 31 villages of Sri Fatehgarh Sahib of Punjab India. The trainees got free training kit including frame, thread, needle, training module, bag & pen etc. to each trainee. MBCT also provided digital training to trainees to enhance their livelihood.

Objectives of the study

1. To evaluate the effectiveness of the Phulkari embroidery training program: Assess the program's success in enhancing the livelihoods of rural women and preserving the traditional Phulkari embroidery craft.
2. To assess the impact of the program on the socio-economic status of rural women: Evaluate the program's effect on the income, employment, and overall socio-economic status of rural women.
3. To examine the program's effectiveness in developing the skills and knowledge of rural women: Assess the program's success in enhancing the Phulkari embroidery skills, communication skills, and media skills of rural women.
4. To identify the challenges and limitations faced by the program: Evaluate the program's challenges, limitations, and areas for improvement.
5. To provide recommendations for future program development and scalability: Offer suggestions for enhancing the program's effectiveness, scalability, and sustainability, and for replicating the program in other regions.

Methodology

This study utilized a mixed-methods research design, incorporating a triangulation of surveys, in-depth interviews, and participatory workshops to gather comprehensive insights.

A diverse range of participants, including Phulkari artisans, designers, and key stakeholders, contributed to the data collection process. Additionally, observational field visits were conducted to witness the production process firsthand and gain a deeper understanding of the market dynamics influencing the Phulkari craft.

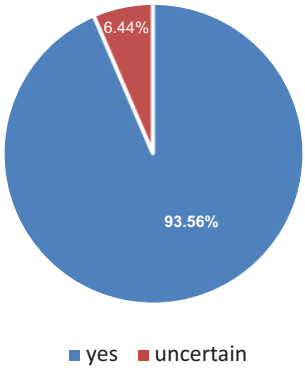
Major Findings

1. The economic significance of Phulkari craft in Fatehgarh Sahib is underscored by the overwhelming majority of respondents who through Phulkari craft, while 6.44% that is 57 trainees remained uncertain. The findings, as illustrated in the pie chart, reveal a significant consensus on the economic importance of Phulkari, with 93.56% of respondents attributing high economic significance to the craft.
2. The integration of digital technology and design innovation in the Phulkari craft industry holds immense potential for enhancing production efficiency and market reach. Respondents recognized this opportunity, with 68.1% i.e. 593 out of 869 expressing interest in learning Instagram and Facebook to expand their customer base. Additionally, 18.6% i.e. 157 sought skills in e-commerce platforms like Flipkart and Amazon to increase sales, while 13.9% i.e. 119 aimed to develop communication skills for effective digital marketplace navigation.
3. Rural Punjabi women face various challenges, including limited market access and lack of time 97.8 % i.e. 850 out of 900 believe that the art of phulkari making is difficult because of lack of time and 5.5% i.e. 48 believe in scare resources and 0.2% i.e. 2 trainees have no problem.
4. Following their initial training, a significant majority of women 61.3% which are 533 trainees have expressed interest in pursuing advanced training through MBCT project. Conversely, 13.2% i.e. 115 of respondents have declined further training, while 25.4% which is 252 out of 869 remain undecided, indicating a potential opportunity for targeted outreach and support. These findings highlight the potential for ongoing skill development and capacity building among these women.



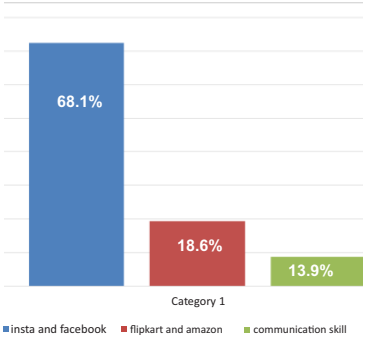
Key Recommendations for Future Program Development

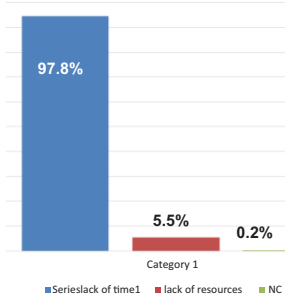
1. Establish a sustainable market linkage mechanism: Develop a robust market linkage system to connect Phulkari artisans with buyers, ensuring a stable income stream.

2. Expand training programs: Offer advanced training sessions, focusing on design innovation, quality control, and entrepreneurship, to enhance artisans' skills.

3. Introduce digital platforms: Develop an e-commerce platform or leverage existing ones to showcase and sell Phulkari products, expanding market reach and accessibility.

4. Foster community engagement: Organize regular workshops, events, and exhibitions to promote Phulkari craft, engage local communities, and encourage intergenerational knowledge transfer.





Recommendations for Policy Makers and Stakeholders

1. Develop policies supporting traditional crafts: Advocate for policies that promote and protect traditional crafts, providing incentives for artisans and entrepreneurs.

2. Provide access to finance and resources: Establish programs offering financial assistance, training, and resources to support artisans and small entrepreneurs in the Phulkari sector.

3. Promote cultural heritage preservation: Collaborate with cultural institutions, museums, and organizations to promote Phulkari craft as an integral part of India's cultural heritage.

Recommendations for Artisans and Entrepreneurs

1. Diversify products and designs: Experiment with innovative designs, products, and materials to cater to changing market demands and stay competitive.

2. Develop business skills: Attend training sessions and workshops to enhance business acumen, marketing, and financial management skills.

3. Form cooperatives or collectives: Collaborate with fellow artisans to form cooperatives or collectives, sharing resources, expertise, and market access.

This study underscores the transformative impact of the Phulkari craft development project on rural Punjabi women, empowering them to challenge traditional gender roles, enhance their economic status, and preserve their cultural heritage.

The project's holistic approach, combining training, skill development, and market access, has been instrumental in driving socio-economic change and promoting women's empowerment.

However, the study also highlights challenges, including limited access to finance and credit facilities, fluctuating market demand, and the need for adapted training programs to respond to changing market trends. To address these challenges, policymakers and stakeholders can provide access to finance and credit facilities, promote market demand through targeted marketing campaigns and e-commerce platforms, design effective training programs focusing on innovation, quality control, and entrepreneurship, and foster community engagement through workshops and exhibitions celebrating traditional crafts.

Ultimately, this study demonstrates the potential of craft-based interventions to drive socio-economic change and promote women's empowerment, and provides valuable recommendations for policymakers, practitioners, and stakeholders seeking to harness the power of traditional crafts to create positive change in the lives of marginalized women, underscoring the importance of sustainable and inclusive development initiatives that prioritize the needs and aspirations of rural women.

The analysis and evaluation of this project was undertaken by Mr. Harwinder Singh under the guidance of Prof. Ramanjit Kaur Johal from the Department of Public Administration, Panjab University, Chandigarh.

"This initiative empowers women to transition from dependence to independence, unlocking new avenues for growth and development. By fostering autonomy and self-reliance, it heralds a new era of women's empowerment and transformative change."
